Employee Assistance Program

Professional Assistance in Total Confidentiality

What is EAP?

- A confidential program that provides professional assistance to help resolve problems
- A program for you or your family when a personal problem makes life difficult
- Designed to help employees before personal problems become work problems
- Provides access to self-help information via the website

What kind of problems?

- Financial pressures
- Stress or tension
- Relationship problems
- Family or parenting issues
- Problems at work
- Depression or anxiety
- Gambling or addictions
- Alcohol or drugs

FAQ's

Is it Confidential?

YES—Confidentiality is a vital part of your EAP. Your employer will not know that you have requested assistance without your permission.

How much does it cost?

The cost of the initial evaluation and brief counseling session is prepaid by your employer. If further counseling is recommended, additional costs are the responsibility of the employee, but will usually be covered by your health plan.

Who can use EAP?

Employees and adult family members (immediate members of the household) can use the EAP on a self-referral basis. If a parent is seeking help for a minor child, under age 18, the parent is encouraged to meet with an EAN counselor for guidance, resources and referral information. Employees may also be referred by their supervisors when personal problems affect job performance.

What happens when I go to EAP?

You will talk to a certified, licensed professional about your problems and you will work with your counselor to establish a plan for further assistance.
